Seems like bad decisions

stack like dominoes.
When one topples, they all go.
    Clackety-
        clackety-
            clackety-
                clackety-
                    clackety-
                        clackety-
                            clackety-
                              clackety-
                                CLACK,
                                  all the way down.

Looking back,
maybe this was the first domino to topple?

The mis$_{\text{step}}$ that kicked off
    the run.